R E P O R T.

No variety of incident has marked the history of the Home for the Children of Seamen, during the past year. Death has not been permitted to enter our borders; neither have the ravages of disease been extensively felt in our midst; steadily and quietly have we pursued the even tenor of our way. The objects of our bounty have made good improvement in the elementary studies they are pursuing; and their general deportment evinces an attention to the directions of their instructors creditable alike to themselves and their teachers, and gratifying to their friends. Of their contentment, no more convincing proof can be given, than that when they have been allowed to leave for a short visit to their parents or friends they have evinced not only a willingness, but an anxiety to return to their pleasant home. Two of the older children have been placed in families where they will be well ~~cared~~ cared for, and will, we trust, be useful to their employers.

The number of children is fifty-six, of whom forty are boys, and sixteen girls. This number is somewhat greater than that to which the managers stated in the last report, they had limited themselves; but circumstances seemed to demand this small increase. The building we occupy is now, however, filled to its utmost extent, and any further applications for the benefits of our charity, must necessarily be denied. This will be trying indeed; but it leads us earnestly to hope that an effort will be made in our behalf, by the friends of the sailor and his family, to procure or erect for our use, a building adapted to our occupancy in size and comfort, our present location being greatly deficient in both these respects.

In addition to our limited accommodations, one circumstance in our history subjects us constantly to anxious and painful effort, and this is the small number of our annual subscribers. The managers trust that they are willing to make every exertion which duty calls for, to procure from a benevolent public, and from the friends of sailors, the funds necessary to the support of this institution; but who can fail to see how cheered, how encouraged they would be in their labor of love, by the consciousness that their cause is sustained by firm friends, who are willing to contribute liberally and regularly, to the moral and intellectual training of the Sailors' family. And, although our Treasurer's Report shows a balance of $440.34, after paying expenses to the amount of $2360.90, yet, it will be perceived that this balance arises from the avails of the Fair, given by the friends of the Society, and from the Great Western Fund, both which sources of income were mentioned in the last Annual Report, and are quite over and above any income of the year just closed. This little fund we had hoped to leave unimpaired by current expenses, towards the erection of a suitable building, which, as already mentioned, we so much need; but this hope has thus far unfortunately been disappointed.

In conclusion—while we are not unmindful of the assistance rendered by some liberal friends, we would urge with zeal and confidence, the claims of this useful and interesting charity upon a commercial community; and trust, that He who hears the widow and the fatherless when they cry unto Him, will incline many to contribute liberally of the abundance which is pouring in upon us, to the support of so benevolent an Institution. Faint indeed would be our hearts, and feeble our hands, were it not for this trust, but with it we may press forward in the path of duty, secure of strength to help in time of need.
